

R. W. Crawford, Boarding and Livery Stable. Agent for Wells, Fargo Express Co., Devon Street.—Mr. R. W. Crawford was born and raised in New York City, came to Arlington three years ago and started the model establishment of which he is proprietor. Those fond of driving will find here special care given to boarding animals or taking charge of their vehicles, and can, if desired, have private telephone connecting stable with their houses, so as to order their carriages brought to their door or returned to the stable. He has trained and gentle horses for driving, and vehicles of every description to hire for couples or parties, and makes a special rate for families. Stages for picnics, chowder parties or parade, carriages for wedding or funeral, express wagon for taking a trunk to or from any point can be ordered here and receive prompt and polite attention, either day or night, as the office is always open, and he employs a staff of trustworthy and competent assistants. It is well known in Arlington and vicinity that horses boarded by Mr. Crawford are sure of getting comfortable quarters, a suitable abundance of good food not a few valuable animals should be regularly boarded here. The hacking and livery service is also worthy of hearty and unqualified praise, for the accommodations are excellent.

S. Goldstein, Choice Groceries, Fresh Can Goods, Russian Caravan and Mikado Teas, Fresh Ground Coffees. Spices: Bottled Goods: Sugar, Rice, Candies and Cereals, Freeman building.—This handsome business, which was first opened to the demands of the public early this year by Mr. Goldstein, makes it a point to offer the public choice groceries at New York prices. Mr. Goldstein has been a resident in Arlington for nine years, and taken a great interest in her prosperity. He is a linguist of no small ability, speaking no less than twelve different languages. With his great business foresight and the above enviable accomplishment, no one can wonder at the success he has had from the beginning, and no one can doubt his increasing his business in the future through the both of these mediums. His business foresight enables him to anticipate the public demands, and provide himself without delay to meet them. His command of twelve languages will enable him to do business with that number of different speaking people, thus, no matter who comes to him they will here be able to make their wants known, and Mr. Goldstein will be able to understand them and supply them with whatever they ask for. Mr. Goldstein has two clerks to assist him, and a horse and delivery wagon, and has resided in Arlington nine years, before which he spent sixteen years in New York City, where he has a wide circle of friends.

John Clarkson, Carpenter and Builder, Chestnut Street north of Midland Ave.—It is said that a "rolling stone gathers no moss," but we suppose that depends where the stone rolls. If it rolls where there is moss, of course it cannot gather it, but, if it rolls in the moss why should it not get as much as the one which does not. "An idle tool soon rusts" is another saying and a good repartee to the rolling stone one. In penning the sketch of Mr. John Clarkson, we have the pleasure of showing where one rolling stone has gathered moss, and is helping to beautify Arlington with its moss of the right sort, too; moss of experience in building every conceivable design of architecture. Mr. Clarkson was born on Island Pond, Vermont, raised and educated in St. John, New Brunswick. Having a desire to learn the carpenter trade he moved to Portland, Me., and placed himself under the able instructions of Mr. Joseph Ayres, then the foreman and builder of that place. After finishing his trade he embarked on the transport, Celestial Empire, from Philadelphia, where he served as ship carpenter until the end of the late rebellion, a period of four years, and after which he went to Goshen, N. Y., and there erected the private residence of President Bedell. of the Erie R., Rutherford, N. J., proved his next attraction in the person of his better half, Mrs. Clarkson, and to his skill as a builder Rutherford owes him the pleasure of having many of her handsome churches, schools and private residences, and likewise Bloomfield, the State, for the same service.

JOHN CLARKSON.

Eight years ago he came to Arlington where, we believe, he has found his Ellys, Buddha, Palestine or Mecca, or whatever he may desire, as during that period he has enjoyed as busy, prosperous and contented a life as any of our happy citizens, having the respect and good wishes of all, and the enmity of none. He is prepared to do any class of work, no matter how large or little in which there is use for a hammer or saw, and his wide and long experience in his trade is a guarantee of it being done well, and estimates and advice will be cheerfully given.
